One of his post-retirement goals was to play golf in all 50 states, ultimately achieved in Alaska on a municipal course with stunning views of Denali. World travelers, the Bakers had visited all seven continents and over 60 countries. Don loved to plan vacations, especially those involving family. ## CHAPTER ETERNAL

James B. Cappio

New Hampshire Alpha '61

Born July 24, 1941 to Jildo Elmo and Anne Bruce Cappio in Montpelier, Vermont, Jim was the oldest of three children. With sisters Jill Anne and Jane Linda, he spent his formative years in the Washington, D.C. area, graduating from Fall Church High School in 1959. From there, he followed in his father's footsteps (Dartmouth '32) to attend Dartmouth College, where he was a renowned bridge player (including playing with John Kemeny, co-inventor of BASIC and future Dartmouth president) and a member of the Phi Psi fraternity. He continued to support the school throughout his life, conducting alumni interviews and serving as an ambassador to interested candidates from around the world.

After college, Jim earned his master's degree from the University of Virginia Darden School of Business in 1967 where, as one classmate once said, when he came into the room "things happened." Just as with his undergraduate alma mater, Jim displayed a passion for the school throughout his life, staying intimately involved through recruiting and support for numerous school initiatives. Over four and half decades, Jim also served as the Class of 1967 Secretary, a record of service for which he was recently honored when his classmates renamed their class gift the "Class of 1967 Jim Cappio Scholarship Fund."

During graduate school, Jim enlisted in the Air National Guard, and while working at the Pentagon, he met the love of his life, Claire McCorquodale of McLean, Virginia, whom he wed on September 9, 1967. Jim deployed to Vietnam after his unit was called to active service following the Pueblo incident in early 1968. A proud, yet often conflicted veteran, Jim would spend the rest of his life trying to prove that a handshake and a joke would get you much farther than any alternative during contentious times. After his military service, Jim embarked upon a successful business career in marketing, brand management, and consulting that spanned four decades, numerous industries, and four continents. One of the things of which he was most proud in his professional life was his company at the time, W.S. Tyler, being one of the first to begin operating in the former Soviet Union in the early-1990s. Over the next decade and, despite no formal language or cultural training, Jim forged lifelong partnerships and friendships with people in countries he had been told his entire life were the enemy. In recognition of his contributions, he was eventually named honorary president and chairman of Mekhenobr, a company which he helped privatize and which operates to this day.

Towards the end of his professional life, Jim transitioned to a career of teaching business as an adjunct professor at the University of South Carolina Upstate. Born with the gift of gab and a lifetime of knowledge and experience, he was a dedicated teacher who captivated his students and helped a number of local businesses launch formal management training programs.

In retirement, Jim became very involved in his church, St. Philips Episcopal, devoting his time to helping build the new parish and lending his less than angelic, but nevertheless inspiring, voice to the choir. During his free time, Jim was a terrible but enthusiastic golfer, a voracious reader, and a stranger to no one. He built and maintained lasting friendships with classmates, work colleagues, neighbors, and fellow parishioners.

Above all, Jim was a devoted husband and father. During their 50 years together, he and Claire raised four sons, Jim, Adam, Matt, and Clay, while spending time in New Jersey, Connecticut, Memphis, and Chicago, before finally settling in Greenville, SC. He was additionally blessed with three daughters-in-law, Gretchen, Tracey, and Kelly, and six beautiful grandchildren, Beatrice, Julia, Allison, Courtney, Peter and Georgia, to whom he was affectionately known as "Banda."

Brian N. Fosgate

Georgia Alpha '76

Brian N. Fosgate, long-time writing instructor in the Warnell School of Forestry and Natural Resources at the University of Georgia, died April 4, 2018, of heart failure. He was 62.

During his 20 years as a teacher—first at Cedar Shoals High School, where he taught graphic arts, printing, and photography from 1983 to 1987—and later at the Warnell School at UGA, where he was writing instructor for 17 years, Fosgate was a student favorite. He often described himself as writing coach rather than instructor because of his positive, encouraging approach to teaching.

Born on Dec. 3, 1955, in Watertown, Wisconsin, Fosgate was the son of Grace and Olin T. Fosgate, who was a professor of dairy science at UGA from 1958 to 1978.

Fosgate was a graduate of Clarke Central High School, where he was a scholar athlete and star football running back for the Gladiators from 1971 to 1974. He graduated from the University of Georgia in 1979 with a bachelor's degree in advertising and print journalism. At UGA, Fosgate was a founding member of Phi Kappa Psi fraternity, established at UGA in 1978, where he served as vice-president, and later as chapter advisor.

Before he began teaching, he was graphic designer and then production manager at Colonial Press, a full-service design and printing company in Athens.

Teaching was Fosgate's passion, and he found a home at the Warnell School. Joining the staff in 2000, he worked tirelessly to lay the groundwork for a vital, ongoing program that hones scientific writing that is simple, clear, and concise.

In his first year in 2000, Fosgate held 170 conferences and critiqued 324 papers, often meeting multiple times with students to help improve a particular assignment. By the time he retired in June 2016, Fosgate had added teaching assistants that allowed the program to expand to serving some 233 students a semester and critiquing more than 576 papers.

Employers wanted graduates to have professional writing skills, and Fosgate took on that challenge with enthusiasm, writing once that he “was charged with preparing Warnell School graduates for entry into the workplace with writing skills that would allow them to succeed and advance in their chosen fields. And to that end, I believe the program has been a success.”

When he retired from Warnell in 2016, Fosgate left behind many friends and an enduring legacy. He often said that working with students was his favorite part of his job, and that they constantly inspired him with their desire to bring about positive environmental change. His influence was evident in the positive feedback he consistently received from Warnell graduates, who credited him with helping their post-graduation success.

Mr. Fosgate is survived by his wife, Helen Hines Fosgate of Athens; his brother, Kevin Fosgate of Ringgold, Georgia; and sister Heather Fosgate, also of Athens.
